Valuable Wall Paper

Chicago, Ill.—When stocks nose-dived in the depression, the Union League Club of Chicago invited members to contribute "worthless" stock certificates to paper a private dining room. It took $1,000,000 worth to cover the walls. So many stocks have now "come back" that the club is soaking the certificates off the walls, returning them to the former owners.

Big Velocity Tester

Langley Field, Va. — Scientists studied the new concrete and steel tunnel for testing airplane resistance. An 8000 horsepower motor drives an air-stream at more than 100 miles per hour, proves that an airplane's skin friction is reduced 5% by eliminating rivet heads; so that above 575 miles per hour present wing designs lose much of their lifting power.

Model Revolutions in Bolivia

La Paz, Bolivia—Politicians who have come to connect South American revolutions with gun-fire and assassination, marvel at Bolivians' restraint. After turning out of office President Jose Luis Tejada Sorensen and his liberal government without shot, Col. David Toro, 37-year-old provisional President, threw out a junta that seized the reins during his temporary absence and set up a new cabinet. No shots, no deaths, no injuries.

Bankers Get Railing

Washington, D. C. — National Banks and Federal Reserve members now have a ruling from J. F. O'Connor, Controller of the Currency, on what securities they may buy for investment. No bonds in default as to principle or interest are permitted; nor are bonds "in which the investment characteristics are predominantly speculative."

Wages in the Capital

Washington, D. C. — The Secretary of Labor announced an employment increase of 225,000 workers in April representing a payroll of $4,200,000. During the first four months of the year exports totaled 12%, imports 17%. The signing of a reciprocal treaty with Iceland, the fourteenth pact of its kind negotiated by the present Administration.

MEMORIAL DAY

Cy Warman in Indianapolis News
Gather the garlands rare today,
Snow-white roses and roses red;
Gather the fairest flowers of May,
Heap them up on the graves of clay,
Gladden the graves of the noble dead.

Pile them high as the soldiers were Piled on the field where they fought and fell;
They will rejoice in their new place there
Today, as they walk where the fragrant air
Is sweet with the scent of asphalt.

Many a time, I've heard it said,
They fell so thick where the battles were,
Their hot blood rippled, and running red,
Ran out like a rill from the drifted dead
Staining the heath and the daisies
there.

This day the friends of the soldiers keep,
And they will keep it through all the years,
To the silent city where soldiers sleep
Will come with flowers, to watch and weep
And water the garlands with their tears.

LEIGHTON HOME AT GILEAD BURNED WEDNESDAY NIGHT

The residence of Irving Leighton at Gilead was burned to the ground last night. The fire was well underway when discovered about 11 o'clock and nothing was saved from the house. The Berlin and Gorham fire departments were called. They made a quick run but the house was nearly ready to fall in on their arrival. They obtained water from the creek near Herbert Cole's and drained it about dry.

The Charles H. Cole place close by was saved with the aid of a hand hose and favorable breeze which carried most of the cinders across the Cole lawn.

The cause of the fire is not known. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

PROTESTS ARTICLE FIVE IN CORPORATION WARRANT

"A small town attempt at Hitlerism, is what Gordon E. Lathrop, perennial candidate for Selectman, calls Article 5 as it is written into the Corporation Warrant. "Plainly," he continues, "the Assessors want no change in their plan. You can either vote for it or vote against it. Any changes or amendments must be made by unanimous consent and a single vote of dissent would put an end to them."

"This article is an important one involving cooperation with the Town in fire fighting. It rightfully should have been written 'To see what action the Corporation will take to cooperate with the Town in fire fighting,' and anything as definite as the plan outlined in the warrant article could have been made as a suggestion for discussion and change."

The whole application in the article is that the Corporation and Town are separate entities, which is not true. Just as surely as the residents of the Corporation are assessed around 50% of the Town tax, they are residents of the Town. The warrant article offers free use of Town equipment to those who are to pay 60% for it! The Corporation residents will pay 60% of the equipment cost, 100% of the cost of fighting fires in the Corporation, 60% of the cost of fighting fires outside the Corporation; 100% of the Corporation's share of maintaining the apparatus; and 60% of the Town's share.

"The most economical and least confusing method of fire protection is for the Town to take over all fire fighting activity, with the possible exception that the Corporation retain one hose cart and skeleton crew for emergency. The Town should buy the equipment, maintain it, and form a company of ten or fifteen from the more active members of the present Corporation fire companies. The cost would be assessed against the whole town (of which we repeat, the Corporation pays 60%). The total cost for town maintenance and one fire company would surely be less than the present Corporation payroll for its three units." That is the argument presented by Mr. Lathrop.

Some Expensive Millinery

New York City—Last January a piece of plaster fell from the ceiling of the Board of Education and crushed the $3.00 hat of Miss Mary Hallett, WPA worker. ## Australians Seek Davis Cup

Philadelphia, Pa.—This week end a team of tennis players from "down under" will take the first steps to regain for Australia the coveted Davis Cup, emblem of world tennis supremacy. Only four countries have ever won the cup: U. S. 10 times, Great Britain 8, France 6, and Australia 6. The Australians haven't won since 1919, and this year decided to take on strong American opposition before meeting the top-flight teams of Europe.

Sheriff Gets Lynching Bill

New Orleans, La.—Because testimony showed that a sheriff's deputy took part in the lynching of Freddy Moore, negro, three years ago, a jury in the Federal Court awarded his parents $25,000 damages against the sheriff and his bondsmen for neglect of duty in not preventing the lynching. Anti-lynching advocates hail this solution of the lynching problem. Instead of suing the county in Indiana 36 years ago, a widow won $4,000 from a sheriff and his sureties in a similar action.

One-Club Golf Star

Southport, England—Toters of 25 pounds of golf impedimenta are referred to Miss Gloria D. Minoprio, a Frenchwoman living in England, who went to the semi-finals in the British Women's Championship using only one club. With her collary instrument, a cleveland, she consistently drove 200 yards, hoisted out of sand traps and putted with deadly accuracy. Winner of the tournament, however, was Miss Pamela Barton, the caddies' night mare, who crams into her bag 15 clubs, dozens of extra balls, sweaters of different weight, boxes of tea, towels, a tent-like umbrella, a shoulder bag to rest in between water and a knapsack of cosmetics. American caddies all went down to defeat.

Hoping to protect 120,000 rail workers threatened with dismissal because of proposed mergers, railroad unions and their representatives arrived at an understanding with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Under the plan, no worker will be laid off for more than 15 years. A worker for a year will be paid a full wage for six months, one of 15 years' service will be paid a full wage for five years.

Treasury Blames Albany

Condition of the Treasury

The Treasury Department has announced that it will be in a position to meet its obligations for the next six months. The department is confident that it will be able to maintain its credit rating and to continue to issue bonds as needed.

CARELESS BRUSH BURNER CONVICTED

On May 1, 1936, Harland Kimball of Gilead, built a fire to burn some brush which had resulted from a land clearing operation carried on during the early spring. After the brush was burned, a large heap of ashes and smoldering cinders was left. Mr. Kimball didn't believe in securing a fire permit before burning because he considered it a nuisance. This fire was built in a field at the edge of a large slash area. Warm, dry weather had resulted in a serious fire hazard in the field and nearby wooded area. Mr. Kimball made several inspection trips to the scene of the fire but was absent for some time around noon on May 2, 1936. During this time an exceptionally strong gust of wind came up and carried some hot coals from the fire into the adjacent dry grass. The grass burned rapidly and the fire was soon in the woods. As soon as Mr. Kimball arrived at the fire he saw it was beyond his control and immediately summoned aid from West Bethel. Paul Head, a local resident of West Bethel, sent in a call to Camp Superintendent Drew at Wild River CCC Camp for aid in suppressing the fire. Supt. Drew, with 25 enrolled men, immediately left for the fire and soon had it under control. The area burned was less than one-half acre but with weather conditions as critical as they were and with a large slash area very close to the fire a much more serious situation could have developed. District Ranger Henry C. Waldo of the White Mountain National Forest arrived at the scene of the fire as soon as possible. After making an inspection he decided that the case was actionable. Trial Justice Daniels of Gilead was interviewed and a warrant for the arrest of Harland Kimball was drawn up. The trial was held at Gilead on May 4 with Trial Justice Daniels presiding. The plaintiff, District Ranger Waldo, and two witnesses

Camp Supt. Irving J. Drew and Acting Assistant District Ranger Paul Morton, attended. Mr. Kimball pleaded guilty and after hearing the facts of the case and testimony of the witnesses, Trial Justice Daniels fined the defendant $25.00 and costs of court.

Following the case officials of the U. S. Forest Service stated that both Maine and New Hampshire had enacted laws forbidding the burning of slash or debris without permits from town fire wardens. It was pointed out that careless brush burners may be held liable for damages caused by such fires and the expenses of fighting them.

BETHEL NEEDS

More and Better Sidewalks—winter and summer
Night Watchman—All the Year
Rural Fire Protection
Enforced Traffic Rules

With the Village Corporation holding a meeting next Monday to consider the modernization of its fire apparatus and a special town meeting following soon after, it behooves the voters to consider carefully the needs of the community and to act as they sincerely believe to be for the best interests of the townpeople as a whole.
The people of the whole town have common interests. The Corporation's equipment is antiquated and dangerously inefficient, and there is at least a possibility of improvement throughout the entire department. The last two fires within the Corporation limits have resulted in serious damage before they were extinguished, but with new equipment the loss might have been a great deal less. There will be no better time to make changes in the present organization and methods, if needed, than at the present when the need of something better in equipment seems to be admitted. It is hoped that the committees of both the Corporation and town will have reached an agreement as to equipment and means of operation that may be possible, practical, and meet the approval of the majority of those interested enough to be present at the special meetings.

The matter of proper equipment is not alone of local concern. Last night's fire at Gilead shows the dependence of small towns upon the larger ones. Adjoining towns should be able to look to Bethel for some protection, and to furnishing this Bethel would receive compensation which should more than cover actual expenses.

"Grant me a steady hand and watch me do that no man can do but me when I go by. I shall be the most powerful in the world the power of the power which has appeared in the human Church. There should be bread by every motorist who stops to a reminder that good driving is a Christian obligation."
—E. H. Hays

What the Politicians
Should Know

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

One of the most interesting developments of recent weeks has been the sudden alarm of many men in public office over various political and economic theories which happened to originate elsewhere than in legislative halls.

Openly the politicians are expressing amazement at many of these new plans and projects, and wondering aloud just where and how they were inspired.

But the politicians should be the last of men to ask such questions.
For years many of them, in the quest of popular support, have been advocating projects not only startling and unusual, but frequently at odds with our American theories of government.

For years many of them have been preaching, for example, the exact opposite of Grover Cleveland's famous dictum that it is the business of the people to support the government, not of the government to support the people.

But whatever the temporary influence of such philosophies on scattered groups of citizens, they seem to be exercising little effect on the great productive body of American workers and farmers.

Recognizing a responsibility to the handicapped and unfortunate, this predominant group, which represents the real strength and spirit of America, still believes with Theodore Roosevelt that America expects every citizen to be willing, so far as he is able, to pull his own weight.

And so long as that typically American spirit of courage and self-reliance prevails, neither the politicians nor the people need fear the wildest theories.

Gould Academy defeated the Bethel team of the Androscoggin Valley League last Thursday by a 14-5 score. The winners scored in every inning but the first.

Browne held the Town team to 6 hits but he passed six men and hit two which kept him in considerable difficulty. Morgan, losing pitcher, was hit for nine safe blows including a double by Daniels and a home run by Young. He also passed four men and hit three batters.

Eddy Robertson and Bob Browne were the only men on either team to get more than one hit. They each secured two singles.

The losers started a rally in the last inning which was cut short by double play, Browne to Littlehale to Robertson.

GOULD LOSES 12-INNING GAME
In a 12-inning ball game, Whitney, South Paris ace pitcher, outlasted three Gould hurlers to win 6-5. Going into the final inning leading 5-4, Coach Anderson had to replace Quimby because of a sore arm. Keniston, who has been pitching great relief ball was the victim of a ninth inning home run which tied the score.

In the eleventh Keniston had to be replaced due to an ailing arm caused by the severe cold weather. Whitman, who relieved him, retired the first three men in the eleventh, but in the 12th Briggs tripled with only one out and scored on Hubbard's bunt to win the ball game.

It looked like another victory for Gould the way Quimby was pitching and it was a tough break for the Academy nine when he had to be replaced with a one run lead.

Briggs with a triple and two singles led the winners' attack while Stearns and Hubbard each hit home runs. Eddy Robertson and Quimby were the only Gould players to get more than one hit; each getting two singles. Dick Young, R. Browne, and Daniels had real set backs in their batting averages to put E. Robertson now out in front with an average of .352.

CHAPTER VIII

THE more Barry thought of it, the more certain he became that the Judge's story, and the revelations in Harlem, removed the only reason for questioning Harwood's hypothesis. When the divorce action was filed, Kelly had promised not to see Betty Barclay again. That promise had induced the withdrawal of the petition. And then Betty Barclay had phoned, while Kelly was out, and just as Mrs. Kelly was going in Harwood's own words, Mrs. Kelly "went wild." Failing to get legal counsel, she talked to Harlow, and there she got "madder and madder." Just after midnight, she drove home, and found Kelly alone, drunk, and with the accumulated wrath engendered by two trying interviews. There were words, and a handy decanter. The design began being almost too nearly perfect.

He found Peggy doing some mending in her dingy room. She had lost flesh, and seemed to be always staring at nothing. "It's Jacky," she comforted in Barry. "I'm worried about him."

The youngster looked pale and ill. "Look here, Peg; will you have lunch with me tomorrow at the Astor? I want you to meet somebody."

"Miss Hambridge?"

"Yes."

"She'd turn up her nose at me like an elephant reaching for peanuts."

"I don't think so. Anyway, I want you to know each other."

The appointment was made at last—one click and Barry called Pat.

"Well, the trail's hot, all right."

"Tell me about it."

"I don't dare over the wire. You know, operations. Come in and lunch with me?"

"When?"

"Tomorrow at one."

Pat was eagerly anxious to hear his news and there was no other way. But, if Pat's nose remained still when she learned she was to encounter Peggy, her mouth stretched. "Why? What have I in common with this girl?"

"Well, Barry answered, darty, "you're keeping her husband in prison."

Pat flushed.

"You can't say anything for that, don't you think? What's she doing so high on about? There's Mrs. John Burke Ridder, Jr. you know?"

"I'm not going high hat. Really, naturally, just now, I don't feel much like meeting strangers. It's perfectly stranger with whom I have no community of interest."

Laughing together, however, it soon became evident that there was a "community of interest." Pat warned to the painted chorus girl fearful for her husband's life, as Pat was fearful for her father. Both heard Barry's account of his adventures with regard to Mrs. Kelly.

"It seems pretty conclusive," Pat said.

"I never thought of that dame—I mean, woman," Peg added. "Would that get Jack off quick?"

Barry explained his understanding that, if there were definite proof of another person's having committed a crime, anyone in custody was released immediately. "The district attorney comes for a dismissal of the indictment, I believe," he told them.

"Yes!" Peggy said, with the tears in her eyes.

Pat was so full, and she found herself repeating and taking this "right club barter." She was Mrs. Ridder, after all. "Wherever the girl might have been, it was the tears beginning to dissolve the beads that stirred Pat. She had never seen anyone cry that way before—cry with her lips twisted into a smile.

"You've certainly stuck to your husband," Pat observed.

"Why not? When you really love anybody, you don't care what they do, or have done, or what they are. It's what they are to you that counts. You're not thinking what you're going to get, but what you're going to give. That is, the right kind of girl is."

"Gosh, she's trying to help me with Pat," Barry thought.

The upshot was that Pat took Peg and the youngster to Southampton the next morning. "Peter suggested it," she told Barry. "And, of course, you're right—I do owe them something."

It wasn't the debt that did it, Barry realized. It was Jacky. Peg wanted Patricia to see him, and the house was so near. There really wasn't any good excuse for not going. So, for the first time in her life, Pat snifled fried fish in an entrance hall, and tripped on worn stair carpets, and found herself sitting in a back room without air or sunshine. She'd known people lived like that, of course, but, somehow, she'd never thought much about it. She found herself thinking now. "If I had to spend one night in this place—That's what's the matter with the boy."

It was arranged that Evans was to drive them out, and come back for Barry on Thursday.

When Barry left Pat at her hotel, she said, "You seem to be everybody's friend, Mr. Gilbert. It's a little hard to understand, considering—"

"Considering that I'm an adventurer and an impostor?"

"Yes."

"Yes," Barry repeated, "but that's how you learn what friendship means."

That night, Barry went to the Coconut Bar.

"I mustn't overlook anything," he reflected.

There wasn't much to overlook in the Coconut Bar. Not in the way of clothing, at all events. The lobby was full of men, more or less surreptitiously glancing at framed photographs of girls whose costumes might almost have been packed in a vanity case. Inside was a square dancing floor with tables about it, like the seats about a prize ring. Above, there was a balcony with more tables, except at one spot, occupied by officers.

There were three shows a night, the amateur Hackshaw discovered from his menu at seven, eleven, and one.

It wasn't hard to get acquainted with any of the girls. One had only to look prosperous, and incline his head an inch or two in the direction of a vacant chair. "We're not supposed to do this," Violet Fane informed Barry, but Luis got a small chance in.

Barry had no expense account and his entertaining grin, and used both to the limit. It wasn't long before the people were telling the story of his life. "I bin with Luis ever since I was a kid," she bragged. "I'm a swell now. You oughta know him. I'll give you a tumble after the next show."

Luis was most affable. A gentleman, but a business man, with a keen eye to splendour, and a glittering contempt for tight suits.

A ranky young fellow, Morano was, who wore spartan clothes, and much jewelry. Slim and dapper, his intelligent hair was slicked back from his forehead. He had a long, thin nose, and straight, thin lips, and a slight, rather curious impudency in his speech. His voice could be very soft at times.

"Tender tonight, Luis is," Miss Fane declared later. "I've seen him cry when somebody sang about mother or the let or sunup. That loved her and lost her stuff, especially. He was married once."

"Did he take?"

"Sure it took. That's why he cries. The Jane died, or sunup. Know what Luis did—when he got the cash, I mean? Bought the house they used to live in, and went on living there alone, with a couple of servants."

"Gee?"

"About that romantic? I'll say so! He's still got the servants, and there all moved to a farm, up above in Jersey, a couple of years ago. Would you believe it—he drives out every morning, after the last show. Nuts about horses, Luis is. Not to be on. Just likes 'em."

"Learned about horses in Fauquier county," Luis said, returning at that instant. "I lived there 'til I was nineteen, and that's all they know. Go on, VI; you'll be late."

"I never was late for a show yet," she retorted. "Nor out of one. Not in all the years I've worked for you."

"That's straight," Morano admitted, as she was leaving. "Never bin out of a show in her life. She's a swell girl, VI."

There wasn't much to be got at the Coconut Bar; not that Violet and Morano weren't willing to talk. Morano's romance had left him a gentle melancholy—or, perhaps, he was only worried about business. But, if he had anything to conceal, it certainly seemed to have no relation to Kelly. On that subject everything was open and above board.

"Just a gorilla," Morano said of the Big Boss, the next night, when Barry returned to the Coconut Bar.

"Oh, Mike was a right," Miss Fane protested.

"Sure!" her employer agreed. "He wouldn't do nothing worse than steal pennies from a dead baby. Pat of VI's though," Luis added, winking at Barry.

"Yeh," Violet declared, dryly; "until that Barclay dame came along."

"He was in here that evening, wasn't he?" Barry asked.

"Yeh. Just a few hours before they croaked him."

"He had a girl pinched, or something?"

"Yeh," Morano repeated. "Nice kid, too. Took her around to the station in them things."

"I don't blame the Jane's husband for getting sore," Morano continued, "though bumping a guy off for that's going a little too far."

"Kelly was soused," Miss Fane said.

"Yeh. Plenty. And he thought the kid was pickin' his pocket. Nothin' to it."

"Wanting my time," Barry told Harwood, the next morning, in the city editor's busy office at The Globe.

"My time, and nearly a hundred dollars of the paper's money. Winslow had it straight. The Fane girl was strutting her stuff from one o'clock until long after the murder."

"Well, it's good to be sure."

"Yes, and I'm mighty sure now. Every step I've taken since our last meeting leads right up to Mrs. Kelly."

Harwood looked at him quizzically.

"Step No. 1?" he asked.

"My advertisement offering a reward for the tumbler of the cab that killed that artist's wife."

"You don't mean that you got it?"

"Triumphantly, Barry opened his note book.

"There it is," he said. "026017. The figure under it are the number of the driver who gave me the information."

Ernie copied both numbers.

"Swell work," he commented.

"Anything else?"

Lots. This fellow had a passenger who got out at Twenty-third street around midnight. When the woman was later two hours later—the driver bumped into him again in Sixteenth street, very much rattled, and looking as though he'd committed a murder."

"Any description?"

"Rather a vague one. That doesn't matter. I'm sure, in my own mind that this passenger was the caller Kelly expected, and that he wasn't the murderer. I'm equally sure that he knew murder had been committed."

"Let's call it a mere supposition. In that case, Kelly was killed around two o'clock. At two o'clock, Mrs. Kelly was in Harlem."

"How do you know that?"

Barry's answer was a full report of his adventures of Saturday.

"Without Step No. 1, Step No. 2 means nothing. In other words, if Kelly'd been killed at midnight—which is the theory every one's worked on Mrs. Kelly's alibi would have been blown off."

Harwood took his finger tips in an almost prayerful gesture. "I wish we could find the guy who looked as though he'd committed a murder."

Barry nodded, again.

"There's also the trouble," the city editor said. "What kind of a chance to see Luis Morano?"

Tough?"

"On the contrary. Cries over a mammy song."

"There's a heap of 'em do," Harwood philosophized.

"He's a Southerner, with a soft voice, and a funny impediment in his speech?"

"That so?" Harwood inquired.

"Where is this Coconut Bar?"

Barry told him, and promptly returned to Mrs. Kelly. "How the deuce are we going to prove what she did after she got home?"

"That's up to you," Ernie said. "I'm off on a new tack now." His eyes twinkled. "One that would go a long way toward establishing your theory of coincidence. Gosh, I'd give my new uppers to break this story within the next week or two."

Thursday evening, Barry spent in his room, mostly thinking. He had telephoned Pat twice since their luncheon together, and found her enthusiastic over her guests.

"There's nothing wrong with the boy," she declared; "nothing that a few weeks out here won't cure. He's on the beach now, with his mother."

Judge Hambridge had taken to the little fellow at once. Almost like having a grandchild. It kept his mind off his worries. And no one could see Peggy, being brave, but always staring at nothing, always thinking of what might happen, without pity that warmed into affection. "She's really an awfully good sort," Pat said, from Southampton. "I like her a lot. When are you coming out?"

"Tomorrow, I hope."

"Well, we'll expect you for dinner."

That branch was healed, all right. Pat had called him "the scum of the earth." In the same hour, he remembered again, he had told her he loved her. As to that, she still maintained silence. "That's the kindest thing she could do," Barry thought. "A Judge's daughter, and I—"

Barry had learned not to think of the future. "Nor heed the rumble of a distant drum," as his own father had put it. Just for now, it was pleasant to be somebody who knew Pat—and he wanted to take that awful look out of the other girl's eyes. "That oughtn't to be hard now," Barry thought. "If I could get that Filipino to talk. He knows when Mrs. Kelly came home, and he's probably got a darned good idea what she did afterward. If we could get to that Oriental—"

At which point, Evans came, and he had been drinking.

"Sorry, sir," he apologized, taking the nearest chair. Evans had none of Willett's compunctions.

"Sorry, sir, but I've been having dinner with Kelly's chauffeur."

"Liquid nourishment?"

"Yes, sir," Evans admitted, sheepishly. "But that was the only chance I had with that Irishman."

"Well?"

"Well, I drove Miss Hambridge, and Mrs. Rogers, and the boy to Southampton, like you said. And I started back today. It was nearly eight when I made the garage, and I was good and hungry."

"There's a decent cafe a few yards away. Nolan—that's Kelly's chauffeur—was sitting at a table, with a load he ought to've gone twice for."

Evans smiled.

"Ed had a grouse on women in general. And he was choked plenty. I hadn't been with him long when he opened up on Mrs. Kelly. There's something queer between her and this Filipino, he says."

"Charlie?"

"That isn't his name, but let it go at that. And, when Ed said 'queer,' he didn't mean anything wrong. Just some kind of an understanding. Mrs. Kelly's been giving the Chink coin and jewelry, regular. Charlie showed him some of it, Ed says."

"Well, the night of the murder Nolan drives Kelly to the Coconut Bar. And home—at nine o'clock. When he gets out at his house, Kelly says, 'Put the car in the garage. Mrs. Kelly's gone up to Harlem, and I won't need you 'til tomorrow morning.'"

"Ed obeys orders. He goes back to Kelly's, and sits in the kitchen. This Chink is in the butter's pantry getting a tray ready. And, while the two of 'em are down there, the damndest row starts upstairs—"

"Nolan and Kelly?"

"No. This was around nine o'clock Mrs. Kelly. She was laying Mike out so you could have heard

Ernie Copied Both Numbers.

It a blocks. Well, this goes on for ten or fifteen minutes, and then the bell from the parlor rings. Charlie starts upstairs with the tray. He gets up two steps, when Kelly appears at the head of the flight. "Come up here, you lousy spy. Come up here while I tell you where you get off!"

"Charlie sets down the tray, and goes. Nolan follows into the pantry, and has a stiff drink. Then he sits down again, and listens to Kelly laying out the Chink."

"Could he hear anything? Words? I mean?"

"No. Just Kelly's voice. Mrs. Kelly was out of it. She'd gone to her room, Nolan thinks. But Kelly made noise enough for two. And, after another ten minutes or so, Charlie comes back.

"I'm fired," Charlie says—in the Chink lingo. "I got to get out. This blankety-blank told me to go quick or he'd kill me."

"Are you going?" Nolan asks.

"Sure," the Chink says. "I got to get my money first. He chased me out of the room when I asked for it, but I'm going back," the Chink says.

"Nolan then took the cook to a movie, and when they got back everything's quiet. It's after midnight, because these two walked home. Kelly's upstairs, talking to somebody, and the Chink's in his room, packing and muttering to himself something frightful. So Nolan says good night to the cook who goes into her room, and then Nolan slips into the pantry, and takes another shot of that hootch."

"What hootch?"

"The rye whiskey I was telling you about."

Barry sprang from his chair.

"The rye whiskey?"

"Sure. And it was in a cut-glass decanter."

"Are you certain?"

"Nolan is. And he's just as certain that it was still in the pantry when the guy upstairs left."

"Why?"

"Because he heard the front door close ten seconds before he was out the back way."

"Gosh!" Barry exclaimed. "That puts it up to Mrs. Kelly, all right. Evans shook his head, drunkenly. "Mrs. Kelly wasn't home," he said. "She went to her sister's after the high jinks in Harlem, and Nolan got her there the next morning before they called the police. There were only three people in that house after the guy went who was visiting Kelly—Kelly himself, cook, and a mighty mad Chinaman."

"Filipino."

"Whatever he was, he was mad, and the decanter that killed Kelly was downstairs with him until just about the time Kelly was killed."

"Thanks," Barry nodded. "I think we've got something."

"Oh, I forgot to give you this. It came—to Southampton—just as I was leaving," said Evans.

"This was a cablegram. About in the smoke-filled room, Barry opened it. Nine words. "Pat and I sailing for home Sunday. Love Mother."

For an instant, he stood, frozen the wire in his hand.

Directly before him, an evening newspaper lay open on the table.

"Outgoing passenger and mail ships," he read. "Sailing tomorrow—Steamship Orange Nassau. For Port au Prince, La Guayra, Curacao, Maracaibo, Carapano, at Pampatar. I'm on my way to end of 'em tomorrow."

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

In silent resignation we again pay tribute to our honored dead. There are many soldiers sleeping their last long rest here at Union Cemetery, veterans of the Civil War. A marble stone marks the resting place of William Silver, who died in action during the great World War, and for whom the Jackson-Silver Post, bears the name of Silver. All those who wear a poppy will know they are doing this bit in memory and honor of this war's dead, and helping the disabled living. Let us all resolve that there will not be even one soldier's grave of any of our wars left undecorated on this Memorial Day. This is so very little for what they gave!

Ted Roberts and Earl Swinton of the National Guard at Norway, have joined the regular army and are stationed at present at Fort Williams, Portland.

Mrs. Marion Mayhew of Curtis Hill is working in the shoe shop at Norway, driving there with her horse and wagon every morning, this being a trip of about 25 miles a day, and a very unusual sight in this day and age.
